

Abstract

A microfluidic device for analyzing biological samples is provided with a sample inlet section including an inlet port, a capillary passageway communicating with the inlet port and with an inlet chamber. The inlet chamber includes means for uniformly 5 distributing the sample liquid across the inlet chamber and purging the air initially contained therein.